By Ernst Haas (1921-1986)

I LOOKED AT AN APPLE for such a long time until it became the first apple I had ever seen. I was so excited that I called a friend to tell him my experience. But how could I find the right words for what I had experienced? How could I describe my visual sensations with such literary words as red, yellow, green, shining, and round after this movement of nuances and counteractions in form and color, even in touch and smell? Anyhow, I did not find the right words and my friend did not believe me, so I ate the apple as I have eaten many an apple before. It was a fairly good apple.

I called my friend again, telling him I just ate a fairly good apple, and he understood me immediately. Conclusion: in visions we are alone, in taste we can be together. All I try to do is to find my inside images in the outside reality.

A picture can be an answer as well as a question, but if you cannot answer your question, try to question your question. There are clever questions and stupid answers as well as stupid questions and clever answers. There can be questions without answers but no answers without questions. To be or not to be—that is a question. To see or not to see—that is an answer.
